

V A L K R

THE POWER TEST GUIDE

Find your real starting point.

Four tests. Twenty minutes. One honest number that decides how you should train — instead of a guess.

4

TESTS

20

MINUTES

3

LEVELS

FOR THE VALKR WAITLIST • TRAIN SMARTER.

WHY TEST AT ALL

Most plans fail at the first session, not the twelfth.

Someone starts a plan built for a stronger person, cannot finish it, decides they are the problem and quits within two weeks. Twenty minutes of honest testing fixes that. You are not here to impress anyone. You are here to get a number — so your training fits you.

Before you test

- Warm up for five minutes: easy jogging on the spot, arm circles, ten slow bodyweight squats, ten shoulder rolls. Then one easy set of each test movement at half effort.
- Rest at least three minutes between tests. This measures strength, not fatigue. Rush it and you measure the wrong thing.
- All four tests in one session, on a day you are not already sore.

1

HORIZONTAL PUSH

Push-up

Hands under your shoulders, body in one straight line from head to heels, elbows angled back at roughly 45 degrees instead of flaring out.

COUNTS WHEN

Your chest comes within a fist's height of the floor and your arms lock out at the top — hips neither sagging nor piked.

STOP WHEN

Form breaks. The first rep where your hips drop or the range gets shorter does not count, and nothing after it does.

Record: clean reps.

2

PULL

Pull-up — or inverted row

With a bar: as many full dead-hang pull-ups as you can. Arms straight at the bottom, chin clearly over the bar at the top, no swinging.

No bar, or not one pull-up yet: inverted rows. Lie under a sturdy table or a bar at hip height, body straight, pull your chest to the edge.

Record: clean reps — and which version you used. They are not interchangeable.

3

LEGS

Bodyweight squat

Feet about shoulder width, toes turned slightly out.

COUNTS WHEN

Your hip crease drops below the top of your knee, heels stay down, knees track over your toes instead of caving in.

ABOVE 30 REPS

Stop and test split squats instead: one leg forward, rear knee lowering to just above the floor. Record reps per leg.

Record: clean reps.

4

CORE

Hollow hold

Lie on your back and press your lower back flat into the floor. Lift your shoulder blades and legs off the ground, arms by your sides or overhead.

START THE CLOCK

As soon as you are in position.

STOP IT

The moment your lower back lifts off the floor. That gap is the whole test — most first attempts are shorter than expected.

Record: seconds.

THE ONE RULE

Your lowest score is your level.

Not your average, not your best. It sounds harsh and it is deliberate: training at the level of your strongest movement is exactly how people injure their weakest one.

	LEVEL 1 · FOUNDATION	LEVEL 2 · BUILD	LEVEL 3 · STRENGTH
Push-ups	0–8	9–20	21+
Pull-ups	0	1–5	6+
or rows	0–8	9–15	16+
Squats	0–20	21–35	36+ or split squats
Hollow hold	0–20 s	21–45 s	46 s+

WHAT YOUR LEVEL MEANS

LEVEL 1

Foundation

Build the base: incline push-ups, rows at a comfortable angle, assisted squats, short holds. Not a lesser version — the version that works for you. Consistent people who start here routinely overtake people who started higher and quit.

LEVEL 2

Build

The largest group. You can do the basic movements. Your job is volume and progression: collecting hard sets and climbing to harder variations step by step.

LEVEL 3

Strength

Standard versions no longer challenge you. You train harder leverage variations — less stable, longer levers, slower tempo — and start the first skill work.

Write it down.

Test today, retest in week 6 and week 12 — same warm-up, same standards. Don't loosen your form to make the number look better: a push-up count that rose because your depth fell is not progress.

TEST	TODAY	WEEK 6	WEEK 12
Push-ups
Pull-ups / rows
Squats
Hollow hold (s)
Bodyweight
My level

Record two more things

Bodyweight: same conditions every time — morning, after the bathroom, before eating. One reading means nothing; compare weekly averages.

Two photos: front and side, same light, same spot. Take them today, then don't look again until week 12. They are the most honest feedback you will get.

What happens next

VALKR turns these numbers into your plan: which variation you start with, how many sets, and exactly when to move up. You are on the waitlist — you get early access 48 hours before launch and the founding price.

Tell us what you need in a fitness app on TikTok — the best comment gets built before launch.

Your health. This guide gives general information on training. It is not medical advice. If you have a health condition, an injury or symptoms, or have not trained in a long time, talk to a doctor first. Train within your limits and stop if something hurts.